SCHOOL OF MINES GAINING A WIDE REPUTATION

Students from Both Coasts Enroll at State Institution; Attendance 20 Per Cent Higher This Year.

With increased prestige and a growing reputation throughout the United States the New Mexico State School of Mines at Socorro has started its new year under the most favorable auspices. When the school opened last week the first registration was 20 per cent higher than that of last year, and the students constituted the most representative body of men that has ever gathered within its walls. They are more advanced in schooling as a whole, than any body of previous terms. Most of them have had preparation for college, and have gone into the collegiate department at the outset. In connection with the increase in attendance, it is to be noted that last year's registration was 15 per cent higher than that of the year before, so that it is evident the growth of the school is steady.

Dr. Fayette A. Jones, president of the school, who was in the city today on school business and in the interest of the mineralogical collection he is making for the San Diego exposition, is enthusiastic over the prospect of the institution.

"With growing attendance and a strengthened faculty," he said, "the promise of a great year is of the brightest." Before the registration for this year ends we will have between 40 and 50 students.

Next year I expect the students to number 75 or 80, and that is about all we can handle with the present school plant. With 80 students the school will be filled up."

That the school is gaining a wide-spread reputation is evidenced by the fact that its students come from all over the country. One of the present student body comes from New York City, an especially significant fact in view of the fact that he passed up the famous Columbia School of Mines in favor of the New Mexico institution. Two of the students come from California, so that it isn't far-fetched to say that the New Mexico institution draws its attendance from coast to coast.

It is well known in mining circles that big companies and promoters whose interest lie in South America and Mexico give preference to New Mexico school graduates. No student leaves the school without a training in Spanish and so the Germans and the other big operators of properties in Spanish-speaking countries give them the preference over the graduates of Columbia and other eastern colleges.
